These sheets of brase were taken to Italy and translated, and were then placed for safekeeping in the sacristy of the Carthusians, near Naples. The Carthusians have also had in their keeping for many years what is believed by some to be an authenticated transcription of the sentence of death pronounced upon Jesus Christ, and which was discovered in the year 1280, in the City of Aquilla. The sheets of bress as translated by Italian scholars read as follows: Now when Jesus entered, with the standard-bearers bearing the standards. the tops of the standards bowed down of themselves and worshipped Jesus. Paret's Experience.

Bishop Paret tells a good story, and at his expense. As it happened, he was on a Washington train recently, and was seated in the immediate vicinity of couple of men who were rather "under the weather," as the saying is. Presently one of the men, with a forcible expletive, remarked to the other hat some one had robbed him of a $20 bill. His friend remarked: "Oh, I placement than that of any other vesguess not; you must have it about you guess not; you must have it about you somewhere."
